boldly ventured out into the gallery and started for Night Guards Post and McCornick, who were stationed there.

Post was the nearest to the prisoners, and they engaged him in a terrible struggle, during which one of the convicts bit a finger off his right hand. They then threw h from the gallery to the ground, sixteen feet below, his body striking on the hard pavement. He was severely injured, and was brought to Dr. Collard's to have his injuries ttended to.

In the struggle the convicts secured Watch man Post's rifle and started for the window at Warden's residence, Walsh reaching it first and Vincent following closely, at the same time firing a volley from Officer Post's rifle at posite end of the gallery. The bullets, how-
